Asian equities rose 0.8%, led by technology shares in South Korea and Japan, after Wall Street benchmarks on Monday snapped a two-day losing streak. Chip heavyweights SK Hynix Inc. and Samsung Electronics Co. — seen as the picks and shovels of the AI boom — both rallied over 4%, with earnings scheduled later this week. The advance in equities, though, showed signs of losing some steam, with Nasdaq 100 futures slipping 0.1% and European shares set for a weaker open. Beyond Anthropic, tech fundraising was the main sentiment driver, with Meta Platforms Inc. seeking to raise as much as US$95 billion.

Navachab spends N$500m annually on fuel. QKR Navachab Gold Mine spends nearly N$500 million (US$30.3 million) annually on fuel, with a 30% increase in fuel costs adding pressure to operations as the company seeks to improve efficiency and extend the mine's operating life. Navachab Managing Director George Botshiwe said rising fuel and electricity costs were affecting the profitability of processing low-grade gold ore, forcing the mine to invest in technologies that reduce operating expenses. "Because of that, operational efficiency is one of the key things. With this low-grade mine and costs going up, fuel alone this year went up by about 30% for us. We spend almost half a billion on fuel per year. A 30% increase in that is significant," Botshiwe said. – Mining & Energy
